THE POWER OF THE BRAIN

The brain is the coordinating center of sensation, intellectual and nervous activity in the human body. It receives information, organizes and distributes it. It not only plays a vital role in the way you think, feel and respond to things, but it is also vital in controlling autonomic and motor functions in the body. Our brain stores all the information we gather, alerts us of dangers and helps us rationalize material. Without proper brain and neuron function, the human body cannot function properly. Unfortunately, our brain and neural activity is continuously being compromised; diminishing our overall health.

WHAT'S CAUSING DIMINISHED BRAIN HEALTH?

We currently live in a society full of stress, lack of sleep, poorly nourished diets and monotonous activities. Consequently, our health is declining. We can't remember where we left the keys, because we're too tired. We can't control our appetite because we're stressed. We don't engage in social activities because we're mentally exhausted. This is not how life is meant to be lived. You are meant to be stimulated, tackle problems, engage in an active lifestyle and live a long and healthy life; this requires optimal brain health.

While some stress is healthy (helping your body deal with immediate dangers or problems), chronic stress (daily stress causing fatigue, irritability and interfering with daily life) can be very detrimental to one's health. Plus, poor diets and unhealthy lifestyles can cause chronic inflammation and unstable hormones; and decrease social and mental stimulation. This leads to diminished brain and neural function, which also leads to a variety of terminal illnesses.

An estimated 20% of adults over 55 years old experience some form of mental health concern. From mood disorders to anxiety to cognitive impairment, mental function becomes a relative issue to many aging adults. – www.cdc.gov
